Pennsylvania is a Participating State

Pennsylvania has been active in the American Diploma Project Network since 2005, aligning its standards to the expectations of postsecondary education and careers. The Pennsylvania State Board of Education adopted the Common Core State Standards in mathematics and English language arts/literacy in July 2010. The state joined the Partnership for Assessment of Readiness for College and Careers as a participating state in the spring of 2010 and helped shape PARCC's proposal for a common, next-generation assessment system. Pennsylvania has not committed to implementing the PARCC assessments and is not administering them in 2014-15.
